

Letters from the Army and Navy.

THE BULL RUN BATTLE. The following letter was written by a gentleman, a member of the 71st Regiment, N. Y. S. M., who took an active part in the great battle at Bull Run on the 21st inst., to a relative in this village, and handed us for publication:

WASHINGTON NAVY YARD, July 23, 1861. I have no doubt you have heard of my safe arrival from the battle; it was a terrible one, one of the greatest ever fought in this country. After we had marched between 9 and 10 hours, starting at 6 o'clock, A. M., Sunday, and a good part of the distance as made in a double quick, we arrived on the battle ground. We were immediately drawn up in line of battle and marched up to within fifty rods of the enemy, in as good order as we ever did on a parade. All the time the enemy was firing into us, but doing little damage. The enemy was just over a hill and we had to march up to the top in order to get at them. As fast as we advanced the enemy retreated. We gained the top of the hill before they reached the woods and made sad havoc among them, killing about 100. After they reached the woods they stood and kept up a brisk fire, most of the time their shots going over our heads. After we had stood up to the top of the hill firing very sharp, the rebels raised an American flag; our officers gave us word to cease firing, saying we were fighting with our own men. We ceased, but the enemy did not; we raised our flag, and at that moment a whole volley was sent at us riddling our flag fiercely. Our men, without orders, blazed at them fiercely, completely driving them out of the woods, and as they went out they were exposed to us; we again opened on them and you could see dozens fall at a time. The first and 2d Rhode Island regiments and the 71st New York were the first to open the battle. After we had driven them away from those woods we were ordered to fall back from the top of the hill, all the time their bullets were playing upon us. We could hear their batteries pass our heads, it seemed as if it was raining only there was music. While I was in the act of capping my musket a shell struck it and shattered it in a thousand pieces, one piece killing a man a few feet from me. I immediately ran and picked up his piece and fired with that the balance of the time. My haversack also received a wound. We were intended to be the reserve, but instead of that we were the advance, and opened the fire. We were upon a musket battery before we knew it, and they opened upon us killing and wounding about eight. We fired on them silencing it and killed all in it, about 30 or 40 in all. If we had a reinforcement in time we would have carried everything before us. We were doing so until the rebels were re-enforced by about forty or fifty thousand men, that number being too great for us (about 20,000). The enemy's whole force was upwards of ninety thousand strong.

ALEXANDRIA, VA., July 21, 1861.

Correspondence of the L. A. Farmer. FRANK W.—Since writing you last we have recovered in the enemy's country, and rather unexpectedly, I assure you. The Colonel being anxious to go to the seat of war, Gen. Mansfield gave him his orders, although prompt for a regiment of so recent formation. However discipline will now be enforced, the punishment being so severe the men will not be caught more than once with insubordination. Company I had a case last night and it turned out rough for the guilty party. The Col. ordered four files of men with muskets, bayonets fixed, and two drummers to draw the prisoner out of the lines, and such hoisting I never heard in my life as the men made while this decorated man marched through the camp streets before taking leave of the Mozart Regiment.

While I write there has just passed my camp eight men handcuffed and tied together; they are to march the parade ground in ten-four hours with men in their rear with loaded muskets to hurry them up; their crime being drunkenness.

The Colonel read the marching orders Friday night that we were to strike our tents at four o'clock on Saturday morning and take up our line of march at five o'clock for "Old Virginia." We arrived at the foot of Sixth street, Washington, after a dusty march of four miles and took the steampath Baltimore for Alexandria where we arrived at 11 o'clock. After leaving the boat we marched to the place where we now are. Passing through the city the house where Col. Ellsworth was murdered was pointed out to us. The Stars and Stripes float from the U. S. Custom House, which is the only one I saw in the city. The people are quiet when they can help themselves, for the city is under Martial Law. Two companies from our regiment are in the city now doing police duty; they are ordered to arrest every body in the streets after nine o'clock at night. Orders are very strict; every order is in accordance with military discipline; no man is allowed to go outside the guard under any consideration, for it is dangerous. Men are being shot by the Rebels who are good Union men in the daytime, but traitors at night. There are but two regiments here now, the 17th and ours, and they are pretty well cut up at present. We have ears to fire; one company in the Police, one in the Alexandria, and two companies for picket guard, and 100 men to guard the camps, the 17th being encamped on the next farm. We have the tents and ground just occupied by the Pennsylvania 5th Regiment; they were already pitched, so we can start at a moment's notice; our baggage and tents are all packed in our wagons. The weather is exceedingly cool, especially nights. The water we use is from Sulphur Springs, which our physician says is very healthy, thanks for that, for I have not been well for two weeks on account of drinking the lime water at Washington.

We are permitted to publish the following extracts of a letter received by one of our villagers from ON BOARD U. S. S. FRIGATE ROANOKE, OFF CHARLESTON HARBOR, Sunday, July 14th, 1861.

We let go our anchor here at 10 A. M. this morning. We left Fort Mifflin at 11 A. M., and we were anchored in the mouth of Cooper River, off Smithtown, N. C., July 12th, 10 A. M., in view of a very strong Secession fort, said to mount 120 guns. We passed Cape Hatteras, on which there is a strong battery, on the 10th of July. We threw in several 10-inch shells and several shot from our rifled 12-pounder, but the distance was too great to do much execution. They also returned our fire in fact they fired the first shot. They made first-rate line shots, but their shots fell about 15 miles short. Yesterday morning, at about 11 A. M., we sighted a schooner with all sail set. We threw a shell over her, but she paid no attention to our gun but kept on her course directly toward us. We boarded her and found her abandoned, there being not a soul on board; she was also in ballast, so that all we got were her sails and some few other articles. We then scuttled her and set her on fire. I suppose the crew left her as soon as we were in sight.

There are anchored here the Wabash, the Vandalia, the Roanoke and a gun boat. I can see Old Sumner in the dim distance, standing directly in the centre of the Harbor, and it is with feelings of regret that I bring to mind that it is in the hands of our enemies.

OFF FORTRESS MONROE, July 22nd. After an interval of some days I again resume my letter. We buried Chapman, one of our Quartermasters, July 15th, in the morning, off Charleston. We left Charleston, July 17th, 3 A. M., and passed Savannah July 18th, in the morning, and found the Stop of war Jamestown and the gun boat lying there. We then ran out off the Savannah Cumberland River, Florida, and put about for Savannah July 19th, and there at 3 o'clock on the morning of July 19th, we saw the Jamestown and gun boat still there. Passed Charleston 2 P. M. same day. We then started away into the Atlantic to see if we could find anything worth noticing.

Sunday morning, July 21st, we spoke a British gun boat. We were bent to quarters as her movements were rather suspicious; she appeared to be conveying a brig. She was wise enough to answer all questions. We then hoisted, boarded the brig, and found out her business, and then let her go. This morning we were all turned out to general quarters as we were coming in off Cape Henry, for we supposed there was a battery erected since we left, but it proved to be a mistake. We are now anchored here again, for how long I do not know, but I suppose some time.

Letters from the Country.

Harvest Season.—Improvements.—The benefits of hard work, &c., &c. There is in every season something to please the lover of country life. Scarcely one delight passed away before there comes another. There is a pleasure connected with the harvest season that none can fail to enjoy. When the new mow sheds its large fragrance all around, and on every side we see large fields of ripe grain waving ocean-like, waiting the scythe of the reaper, but wondrous are the changes in the mode of harvesting, from that of a few years ago. The scythe swung with all the strength of the human arm but slowly cut the grass, and the heavy cradle with immense manual labor could only cut down a very few acres a day, and either the mowing or the cradling was exceedingly hard work for the laborer. Now, however, we scarcely see either. The "Improved Mower and Reaper" has taken their place, and now one man with a team can do more than eight could formerly in the same time. Mark, however, how great the improvement even in regard to these machines. None have been in use more than five years, yet all have been improved and re-painted, some of them several times. Even these machines, however, are too slow for this young America; they want to go still faster. Well, in all this there is, some may say, very little to interest a looker on. Let such be undeceived as soon as possible. To see the man riding, as remarked a fresh arrival from "Ireland," on his cart, and the grass falling beside him, beat all Germany. Any one who carefully observes these things will find real pleasure in estimating how grandly man's desire for pecuniary profit does incite him to task his ingenuity to such an extent, and what the old adage says is the case, viz: "Time." Now if "Time is money," it by no means follows that he who has plenty of the former has also of the latter. A practical illustration of this is that even here there are so many unemployed, and really needy. Those who speak of not being affected by this war will find themselves mistaken, for already it has affected all in the community, and the suffering consequent thereon will not be confined to those on the battle field. Not only so, but the finest crops for many years, and although we hear of the little Long Island of partial failure, surely there is nothing of it here, and literally "their barns are filled with plenty." There is something, too, in the excitement and hurry of this busy season that is congenial to one accustomed to city life. There is the lurry without the confinement, the zealous effort without an uncertainty as to the result, and the hard work without the bad air. How many live in the city and boast of its excitement and activity, but for too often it is a fatal liking. But here we have bustle and activity enough for the greatest business-lever, and yet fine air and abundance of room. This furnishes pleasure enough, and a good means of raising money, and is decidedly a health making operation; and then, too, the riding and the pitching all help it along, and so whether you merely look on or try to help you will be physically benefited. Thus believes, yours as ever, RUSTIC.
