

VICTORY! VICTORY!! VICTORY!!!

The following special dispatch to the Post was received last night at 10 o'clock from A Carnegie, Esq., at Alexandria. Victory has perched upon the banners of the Republic :

ALEXANDRIA, Sunday night.

The enemy are completely routed at Bull's Run. The batteries are taken. The victory is overwhelming. The backbone of secession is broken. Richmond is not far from our grasp.

A. CARNEGIE.

road to Washington.

ALEXANDRIA, July 22nd.

EDITOR POST:—My despatch last night was based on a report brought by special messenger, who left the field at 4 p. m. The batteries (at Bull's Run) were then in our possession and the day ours. Subsequently General Johnston, with twenty thousand men, carried into action, and drove our forces back. They are now arriving here, and will re form and be at the enemy again before long.

A. CARNEGIE.

WASHINGTON, July 23.—T. M. CARNEGIE.—Gen. M'Dowell beat Gen. Beauregard twice on Sunday, and Gen. Johnston once. It was only when our troops were utterly exhausted, and a fresh army attacked, that they were overpowered. We really gained three and lost one battle. The lesson is amply worth all its cost. One hundred thousand men will leave here soon under Gen. M'Clellan, to annihilate rebellion. No half work now. Forty additional regiments were accepted by the War Department yesterday. The Government is fully aroused, and the entire property of the South will be confiscated if necessary. The Ellsworth Zouaves, it is said, killed nearly all the celebrated Black Horse Cavalry. Washington is perfectly safe, and the fortifications are fully manned with fresh troops. The rebels have made no demonstration to an advance, as their loss fully equals ours. A. CARNEGIE.
